A THRILLING INCIDENT.

The Thunder Storm

BY GEORGE D. PRENTICE.

I never was a man of feeble courage. There are out few scenes of either human or elemental strife, apon which I have not looked with a brow of daapon which thave not noted with a brow of us-ring. I have stood in the front of the battle, when the swords were gleaming and circling around me-like flery serpents in the air. I have stood on the mountain pinnacle, when the whithwind was rending the cake from their rocky cliffs and scattering them to the clouds. I have seen these things with a welling soul, that knew not, that recked not of danger; but there is something in the thunder's voice that makes me tremble like a child. I have tried to overcome this unmanity weakness. I have called pride to my aid; I have sought for mor al courage in the lesson of philosophy, but it avails me nothing. At the first low moaning of the distant cloud, my heart quivers, shrinks and dies withing.

me. My involuntary dress of thunder had its origin in an incident that occurred when I was a boy of ten years. I had a cousin, of the same age of my-self, who had been the constant companion of my childhood. Strange, that after the lapse of so many self, who had been this constant companion of my childhood. Strange, that after the lapse of so many years, that countenance should be so familiar to me. I can see that bright young creature, her eye flashing like a beautiful gem; her free locks streaming as if in joy upon the rising gale; her cheek glowing like rubys through a wreath of transparent snow. Hervoice had the melody and joyousness of a bird's, and when she bounded over the wood land hill, or fresh green valley, shouting a glad answer to every voice of nature, and clapping her little hands in the very ecstacy of young existence, she looked as if breaking away a freed nightingal, from the earth, and going off where all things are beautiful and happy like her.

It was a morning in the middle of August. The little girl had been passing some days at my father a house, and she was now to return home; her path lay across the fields and I gladly became the companion of her walk. I never knew a summer morning more beautiful. Only one little clond was visible, and that seemed as pure and white and peaceful as if it had been the incense smoke of some burning censer of the skies. The leaves hung silent in the woods, the waters for the bay forgot their undulating, the flowers were binding their heads as if dreaming of the rainbow and dew, and the wholatmosphere was of a soft and luxurious aweetness that it seemed a cloud of roses scattered down by the hand of a Peri, from the far off garden of Pardise. The green earth and blue sea lay abroad in their boundlessness, and the peaceful sky hung over them. The little creature at my side was in a delirium of happiness, and her clear sweet voice came ringing upon the air often, as she heard the notes of some favor te bird, or found some strange and lovely flower in her frolic wanderings. The unbroken and almost supermatural tranquility of the day continued till noon. Then, for the first time, the indication of an approaching tempest was manifest. Over the summ; of the mountain, at the distance of sbout a mile, the fol became suddenly visible, and at the same instant a hollow roar came down on the winds as if it had been the sound of waves in a nocky cavera. The clouds rolled on like a banner unfolded upon the air; but still, the atmosphere was as calm and the leaves as motionless as before, and there was not even a quiver upon the sleeping waters to tell of the coming hurricane. To escape the tempest was impossible. As the only tesort, we field to a mighty oak that stood at the foot of a tall and rugged precipice. Here, we remained and gazed almost breathless upon the clouds marshalling themselves like bloody giants in the sky. The thunder was not frequent; but every burst was so fearful that the young oreature who stood before me shut her eyes convulsively, clung with desperate strength to my arm and shrieked as if her heart would break. In arm and shricked as if her heart would break. In a few minutes, the storm was upon us. During the height of fury, the little girl lifted her fingers to-ward the precipice that towered over us. I looked and saw an amethystine peak, and the next moment and saw an amelhystine peak, and the next moment the clouds opened and the rocks tottered to their foundations; a roar like the groan of the universe filled the nir, and I felt myself blinded, and thrown, I knew not whither. How long I remained insensible, I cannot tell; but when consciousness returned, the violence of the tempest was abating, the roar of the winds was dying in the tree-tops and the deep tops of the thinder lower of the thinder lower. murs from the eastern hill. I rose and looked tremblingly and almost deliriously around. Slee was there, the dear idol of my infant love, stretched out on the green earth. After a moment of irreso-lution, I went up and looked upon her. The hand-kerchief upon her neck was slightly rent, and a

a single dark spot upon her bosom told where the pathway of her death had been.

At first I clasped her hand to my breast with a cry of agony, and then laid her down and gazed upon her face almost with feelings of calmness. Her oright disneveled ringlets clustered sweetly around her brow; the look of terror had faded from her ips, and infant smiles were pictured there; t c red rose tingcupon her cheek was lovely as in life, and I pressed it to my own; the fountain of tears was opened, and I wept as if my heart were water, I have but a dim recollection of what followed: I know that I remained weeping and motionless to the coming twilight, and I was taken tenderly by the hand and led away where I saw the counter nance of parents and s sters.

Many years have gone on the wings of light and shudow, but the scene I have portrayed still concessorer me at times, with terrible distinctness. The over me at times, with terrible distinctness. The cak yet stands at the base of the precipice, but its limbs are black and dead, and the hollow trutk looks upward to the sky as if calling to the clouds for drink—an emblem of rapid and noiseless decay. One year ago I visited the spot, and thoughts of bygone years came mournfully back to me. It thought of the little innocent being who fell by malike some heautiful tree of Spring years up, by the ike some beautiful tree of Spring, rent up by the whirlwind in the midst of its blossoming. But I whitiwing in the midst of its blossoming. But I remembered—and oh! there was joy in the memory!—that she was gone where no lightnings slumer in the folds of the rainbow cloud, and where sunlit waters are rufled not by the storm-breath of the Omnipotent.

My readers will understand why I shrink in terror from thunder. Even the consciousness of sequrity is no relief to me—my fears have assumed the nature of an instinct, and seem indeed a part of my existence bas , nothing mon and
